

PEACE THOUGHTS

Are we so deaf that we do not hear a loving God warning us that humanity is in danger of committing suicide?
Are we so selfish that we do not hear our just God demanding that we do all we can to stop injustice from suffocating the world and driving it to war?

Are we so alienated that we can worship God at our ease in luxurious temples, which are often empty in spite of all their liturgical pomp, and fail to see, hear, and serve where God is actually present and where God requires our presence, among human beings, the poor, the oppressed, the victims of injustices in which we ourselves are often involved?

It is not difficult to hear God's call today in the world about us.
What is difficult, is to do more than just offer an emotional response, sorrow, and regret.
It is even more difficult to give up our comfort, break with old habits, let ourselves be moved by grace and change our life and be converted.

GOSPEL THOUGHTS: Luke 19:28-40; Luke 22:14-23:56

Mums, teachers and nurses just get on with the job.
Persistently unnoticed and taken for granted, they are a power for goodness. They are the power that is most like God; perhaps the very presence of God. Loving and forgiving couples are a sacrament
- living and active signs of God's love.

This week, we celebrate the very nature of God. God, 'who was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be' is constantly with us. What kind of power is it that is persistently, lovingly present? God is seen refusing advantage, and becomes a servant, washing his friends feet. Humbler yet, God, in Jesus, becomes victim to our brutal way of blaming and punishing.
We are all washed clean in baptism and called to imitate his humble action; bringing new life instead of death.
